An attempt to repeat this experiment with a soap, which had been slightly acidified either by the addition of a minute quantity of oleic acid or of mineral acid, gave an entirely different result, an opalescence with increasing cloudiness and tendency to precipitation was noted between.2M and.4M NaCl, followed by complete precipitation at.45M NaCl. Further tests using varying proportions of soap, varying proportions of NaOH, and of NaCl and other salts of Na, brought out the remarkable fact that, as long as the soap employed was not too greatly diluted and was slightly alkaline, a jelly would be formed at all points between.2M Na and.45M Na regardless of whether the Na was derived from NaOH, from NaCl or other salts of Na. In very concentrated soap solutions or in very strong alkali the jelly formation commences at a somewhat higher concentration and continues also somewhat above.45M. But it may be stated as a general principle that a zone of jelly formation obtains within these ranges, provided the original concentration of OH ions is in excess of the amount required to produce a strong pink coloration of the soap solution with phenolphthalein. If insufficient alkali is present as a result of the addition of small amounts of organic or mineral acids to the system, precipitation instead of jelly formation is observed. Since jelly formation commences and ends at a given strength of the Na salt almost regardless of the nature...
